This diagram illustrates the final assembly step for a wooden structure. The main frame is shown with various components being attached. On the left side, two PU90 components are being installed on the vertical frame, each secured with a YS screw. In the center, a horizontal bar is being attached to the side panel with multiple screws. On the right side, another PU90 component is being installed on the vertical frame, also secured with a YS screw. The bottom of the structure features several more PU90 components and YS screws. A detailed inset at the bottom right shows the specific parts: a PU90 component (labeled H90) and a YS screw (labeled 5x60), both of which are required in a quantity of 5 (5x).

Technical drawing of a rectangular table, showing dimensions and assembly points. The table is oriented horizontally. The overall width is 456 and the overall height is 90. The drawing includes four circular components, likely wheels or casters, positioned at the corners. The distance between the centers of the two wheels on the left side is 350. The distance between the centers of the two wheels on the right side is 220. The distance from the left edge to the center of the top-left wheel is 90. The distance from the right edge to the center of the bottom-right wheel is 90. The drawing also shows two small rectangular components, possibly handles or latches, located near the top and bottom edges. The drawing is enclosed in a dashed rectangular border.
